Let's continue our series on the Subgenres of Industrial Music. [If you need to catch up, please read the earlier posts in this blog. So far, we've introduced Items 1 and 2 out of 165. The first one was Techno Classics, and the second one was Female Electro.] Tonight's subgenre is Nu Metal. The appearance of this style has always been confusing as I'm not exactly sure how it has come to be associated with our club. We will examine that here.

Nu Metal arose in the Early 1990s by infusing elements of Alternative Rock, Grunge Pop, and Industrial Music. However, it was heavily resisted by our culture throughout 1990s with it often being referred to as "Cock Rock" and "Sell Out". Even today, the Local DJs are split on this style. Gothfather and Darks Choir played it in the early days of IGUN, and Evoke recently kept it going at Rewired. Yet Pleasure Kitten, Cable and our team (Frequency Mutineers) has often tried to leave it behind—instead favoring Electronic Dance Music.

Emmy recently wrote a wonderful review of Detroit's City Club, and she nicely described our feelings: "The local juggalos keep trying to get the Insane Clown Posse into the mix, but are unlikely to succeed, and this is a good thing". Although ICP is not Nu Metal, Emmy's words reflect a desire to maintain our culture. And this maintenance was our goal when we became the Resident DJs at Rewired. Yet we also stand for eclecticism, diversity, and the future. A common criticism of Goth Clubs is that they always sound the same, so we've tried to find ways to do something different. We've been able to achieve this goal by respecting the past, present, and future of our culture. And like it or not, Nu Metal is part of our past. So let's take a look at how this came to be.

First, a local influence has permeated our club. As noted, some of the early Industrial DJs in Bowling Green played a lot of Nu Metal, and thus it became part of the local scene. Also, our club kids were coming to us from the mall, film and television cultures—places where truly underground music was not readily available. Rewired in particular focuses on playing requests, and these kids were thus putting their backgrounds onto our playlists. This trend continues today as we often get requests from the Nu Metal Subgenre—especially from soundtracks.

Second, Nu Metal is alternative and the mainstream often lumps the various underground styles together. The subgenre thus lived in the grey area between alternative and mainstream. This virtual location allowed it to be easily sold to the conventional public as "cutting edge" yet its rock-based structure let this large audience remain comfortable. Thus Nu Metal tended to show up on a lot of mainstream movie soundtracks like that for Dracula 2000, Queen of the Damned (2002) and Daredevil (2003). Interestingly, Industrial Music pioneer Graeme Revell (SPK) is responsible for compiling many of these soundtracks thus further linking the two cultures. Many of these films also concern topics directly related to our culture (e.g., dystopia, vampires).

Third, Nu Metal is not entirely based on a Rock Music structure. In the 1990s, Industrial Music began incorporating more electronic elements as it moved from the Rock to the EBM Substyle (q.v., www.myspace.com/rewiredbg). Nu Metal made a similar shift with several groups (e.g., Mushroomhead, Slipknot) including a DJ both in studio and on stage. Band DJs and Club DJs share much in common, and these similarities thus brought the Nu Metal and Club Music Cultures closer together. This convergence ultimately led to both styles showing up in Industrial Clubs.

Given this background, I now present the track listing for this week's disc. The CD contains many classic songs from the Nu Metal Subgenre. As noted, many of these tracks come from movie soundtracks. Names for the films are listed in brackets. These songs remain in rotation at Rewired, and it is likely that will continue :-)
